ABSTRACT

This document contains a directory of resources available in Pennsylvania to help achieve the goal of safe schools. Following a copy of the Safe Schools Act of 1993, nine sections list agencies that provide services and products under the headings of: conflict resolution/mediation, gangs, suicide, crisis response, family violence, diversity, school policy, community collaborations, and training resources. Resources include printed materials (e.g., books, curricula, newsletters, manuals), videos, and training programs. A title index to resources is provided. Appendixes include directories of Pennsylvania county and regional agencies concerned with domestic violence, children and youth services, and school-based probation programs. (LMI)

Colleagues:

Abraham Maslow taught us that before we can engage in a productive life, pursue effective interpersonal relationships and strive for full actualization of our potentials, we must be safe and feel safe. This is ever so true for our students as well as educators. If children and youth are afraid, if teachers feel intimidated, if our schools are places of fear, education cannot occur.

This directory is a resource that can be used to assist in achieving our goals of safe schools. We have assembled a list of resources that can help Pennsylvania schools develop and implement strategies for safety.

It is only through partnerships and collaboration that the complex problem posed by community, family and student violence can be addressed. It takes the whole village, police, parents, educators, human service agency staff and most importantly, students themselves, to make a school safe for learning.

I hope you will use this directory to help make schools safe for the students, educators and the communities they serve.

Sincerely,

Gary W. Ledebur
Director, Bureau of Community and Student Services

The Safe Schools Act of 1993

Violence against students and teachers in our nation's schools is reaching epidemic proportions. Approximately three million thefts and violent crimes occur on or near school campuses annually—a rate of one every six seconds.

The Safe Schools Act of 1993 is the administration's initial response to the escalating problem of violence in schools. The proposal creates a program of targeted federal assistance to local school districts to address the unacceptable and increasing levels of violence in our nation's schools. It also helps schools achieve National Education Goal Six, which provides that by the year 2000, every school in America will be free of drugs and violence and offer a disciplined environment conducive to learning.

Data collected from various sources indicate that students, teachers, and staff from urban, suburban and rural areas are affected:

- Sixteen percent of high school seniors report being threatened with a weapon at school and seven percent report being injured with a weapon.
- One of every five high school students now carries a firearm, knife or club on a regular basis.
- About 20 percent of teachers reported being the target of verbal abuse by students in the month prior to the survey. Eight percent reported physical threats, and two percent reported physical attacks in the year prior to the survey. Teachers in cities are more likely to be the victims of verbal abuse and threats.
- Homicide remains the leading cause of death among blacks, regardless of gender or age. Homicides account for 30 percent of deaths among black males aged 5-9; 41 percent of deaths among black males aged 10-14; and 62 percent of deaths among black males aged 15-18.

MAJOR PROVISIONS

The Safe Schools Act authorizes:

- $75 million in funding in fiscal year 1994; $100 million in fiscal year 1995; and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1996, 1997 and 1998.
- Competitive grants to local educational agencies with serious school crime, violence and discipline problems for projects designed to combat those problems and thereby enhance school safety and promote improved access to learning.
- National leadership activities to be conducted by the Secretary of Education.

GRANT PROGRAM

To be eligible for a grant, a local educational agency must be receiving, or meet the eligibility criteria for Chapter 1 concentration grants, and serve an area in which there is a high rate of school crime, violence and discipline problems. Grantees could receive assistance of up to $3 million per year for up to two years. In order for grantees to receive a second year of funding, they must develop a comprehensive, long-term school safety plan for combating and preventing school violence.

Under the proposal, school districts would have the flexibility to design their own programs, which could include planning and implementing comprehensive school safety strategies, coordinating with community programs and agencies, developing and implementing violence prevention activities such as conflict resolution and peer mediation, and installing metal detectors and hiring security guards to help keep dangerous weapons out of school.

To ensure that the program's emphasis is prevention and not just intervention, the proposal places a 33-percent cap on funds that could be used to purchase metal detectors or hire security personnel.

NATIONAL LEADERSHIP ACTIVITIES

The bill authorizes the Education Secretary to reserve up to five percent of each year's appropriation to conduct a variety of national leadership activities. Authorized activities include research, program development and evaluation, data collection, public awareness, training and technical assistance.

How To Use This Directory

As the table of contents indicates, there are nine sections dealing with gangs, diversity, suicide policy, family violence, community collaboration, post vention and training resources. Each section lists numerous resources pertaining to the topic. The resources may include videos, curricula, staff development, articles, research and training. The resource type is indicated in parentheses immediately after the item title.

The index contains an alphabetical list of resource titles. If you wish to locate a specific item by name, the index will direct you to the appropriate page.

In addition, the appendix includes lists of agencies and programs that offer services at the local level. Educators may wish to contact the respective groups to learn about the services available.

It is our hope that this directory will assist educators in finding needed services and products in a timely fashion. Ultimately, we hope it helps all of us to have safe schools and communities.

Conflict Resolution/Mediation

Conflict is a part of everyday life. It cannot and should not be avoided. For most people, the way in which conflict is handled directly affects their quality of life.

Youth often deal with conflict ineffectively by avoidance or acting out with expressions of lewd language and violent behavior. Society in general offers too few examples of how youth can move more quickly to mutually acceptable solutions to daily conflicts. Youth are left with feelings of hopelessness, frustration and rage. These feelings can be alleviated by the use of conflict resolution and mediation techniques.

Conflict resolution/mediation programs have long been a successful component of many community-based negotiation efforts. During the past several years many national organizations have led the way to implement mediation programs in the school, most notably: the American Bar Association, National Association for Mediation in Education (NAME) and School Mediation Associates. In addition, a number of community mediation centers have begun efforts to implement peer mediation programs in their local school districts.

Peer mediation is a process by which one or more neutral student mediators guide their peers to mutually acceptable solutions to conflict. This process is recognized as a primary means of defusing situations that might escalate into violence in or outside of school.

■ Violence Prevention Project

The Violence Prevention Project employs a public health approach to the problem of adolescent violence and homicide. The project has developed a community-based education program, counseling and referral services for high-risk youth, community coalitions, peer leadership training and support groups. The project's work is based upon the "Violence Prevention Curriculum for Adolescents" developed by Dr. Deborah Prothrow-Stith. The design of the curriculum enabled it to be adapted for use in non-school settings and thereby served as the springboard for the creation of the Violence Prevention Project.

Gangs

Youth gang involvement is no longer a phenomenon occurring exclusively in large metropolitan areas. No community, large or small, suburban or rural, is immune to gang activity.

In some communities, gang activity has become more violent and has generated a climate of fear for residents. This fear doesn't stop at the school gates. Many teachers and students are fearful of the behaviors of gangs and gang members and feel that they are no longer safe inside a school building or on the school grounds.

In order to restore the sense of security which may have been displaced by gang activity, community and school leaders must share information and collaborate on a wide range of strategies to prevent gang violence and crime. Constructive opportunities are needed for gang members and young people at-risk of becoming gang members.

Suicide

Statistics indicate that the occurrence of suicide among young people nationwide has increased dramatically in recent years. In fact, suicide is one of the leading causes of death for young people ages 15 to 24.

The tragedy of a suicide has rippling effects. Not only is the act of suicide felt by the youth's family and friends, but its effects are also felt by the community and school. Professionals who work with youth need to be aware of resources that can aid them in helping those who may be affected by such a tragedy.

Crisis Response

No matter how carefully one plans and implements safety precautions, tragedy will strike schools on occasion. The tragedy may be a student's suicide; serious injury from an accident; or the death of a teacher, administrator or parent. Whatever the incident, whether in school or not, the impact will be felt by all members of the educational community.

Grief, anger and acting-out behavior are common responses to tragedy. Obviously these responses, however predictable, can have deleterious effects on the school if appropriate action is not taken. These actions are grouped under the heading "post-vention."

The organizations listed here offer training to school personnel about effective post-vention responses. In addition, many local agencies, for example MH and CASSP, will work on-site with school resource people to help students and staff deal with their feelings in healthy and healing ways.

A Student Assistance Program (SAP) uses a systematic process for school personnel to determine which students are having problems and refer them for help. The program is designed to identify students who are experiencing difficulties in school that may be a result of substance abuse or mental health problems. The heart of the program is a Student Assistance Core Team, comprised of a central office administrator, counselor, two teachers and another staff person such as a nurse, social worker, psychologist or in-school suspension coordinator. In addition, staff designated by the county mental health and drug/alcohol agencies are assigned to each team as liaisons. Team members possess a common base of knowledge about student assistance programs in relation to adolescent chemical dependency, suicide and other mental health concerns. Every school district has a Student Assistance Program. A listing of statewide staff and regional coordinators is in the appendix.

Family Violence

Family violence, whether physical, sexual or emotional, has a direct and profound effect on children's behavior and achievement in school. Students who live with violence often exhibit inappropriate and non-productive behaviors making the classroom teacher's job more difficult. Therefore, teachers and administrators may have to refer some students and their families to appropriate resources for assistance. Fortunately, there are many local and state agencies to offer such assistance.

The resources listed in this section can help educators in several ways. First, these organizations offer information on identifying the many manifestations of family violence. Second, they identify people who can intervene to work with the child and/or family to address problems in more effective, non-violent ways. Third, teachers can get information on how to reduce the effects of family violence on classroom behavior.

As they receive needed support and their families acquire better coping mechanisms, students will be better able to concentrate on academic achievement.

Diversity

Most conflicts arise out of communication problems, many of which emerge because the individuals are different in age, ethnicity, education, race, sex or economic background. Since we live in an increasingly diverse society, it is important that we see diversity as a positive value offering each of us new insight into other cultures and people.

It is important that schools acknowledge the unique cultural characteristics of all students and teachers. A multicultural learning environment is created from the variety of individual cultural values brought into the classroom, combined with the overall school environment. Teachers and administrators are in a leadership role and are responsible for meeting the learning and support needs of each student. Their willingness to explore and understand individual differences will greatly affect the learning environment.

School Policy

This section focuses on policy as an integral part of dealing with school violence. The resources listed here provide information about policy issues, ranging from common disciplinary problems to the rarer but significant difficulties of serious violence against people and property.

These resources can be valuable in implementing safety assessments, weighing alternative responses, and developing a plan of action. By accessing information from the various organizations listed, educators can look at the broad spectrum of philosophical and practical issues that affect policy decisions. The goal is comprehensive policies based on the experiences and expertise of many individuals and institutions.

Community Collaborations

If schools are microcosms of the community, then school violence simply attests to the pervasiveness of violence outside of school. Consequently, dealing with violence requires the concerted efforts of multiple agencies, organizations and individuals. This portion of the directory offers resources from many sectors: education, social services, government agencies and community groups.

The inclusion of these groups reflects the fact that schools alone cannot be responsible for eliminating societal problems. This section offers ideas and resources for bringing together parents, government, social services and other groups to work collectively.

Community collaborations can range from small committees working on a single issue to full-blown coalitions charged with changing long-term goals and plans.

Training Resources

Since each school has its own issues and strengths, there is no single answer or right way to deal with violence for every building or district. Therefore, it is often neccessary to find tailor-made training that fits a school's needs while building on existing strengths.

Listed on the following pages are resources to train staff and students in conducting conflict resolution programs, alternative discipline methods, safety assessments, etc. Some of the training packages are free; others have charges. Please contact the individual organizations about specific services, costs and availability.
